

How can my projects benefit from subcontractors?

Subcontractors in Germany's construction industry

The use of subcontractors is part of daily business in the industry and construction sector

A large part of the orders would not be feasible without the work of external service providers. Although the German economy has been on the upswing for decades, the shortage of skilled workers is keeping the construction industry firmly under control. The result is full order books, but not enough workers.

Subcontractors are the ideal solution to this problem - but caution is advised

In Germany these problems are often solved with subcontractors. In this way it is possible to react quickly to personnel shortages and orders. But why do you need an intermediary for this? In short: To save time, nerves and money. Because as leading experts, we know what is important.

Why is foreign skilled personnel much cheaper?

Same skill level, different non-wage labour costs

The non-wage labour costs in Germany are a lot higher than in companies like Slovenia. A Slovenian employee thus earns far more in Germany than in Slovenia.

Concerns about training standards are unjustified

Despite the acute shortage of skilled workers, there companies still underestimate the training standards in Eastern Europe. But the study of the Integration Fund (2014) has shown that on average, many workers from EU countries have a higher level of education than Germans and Austrians.

It is therefore the best time to throw out outdated prejudices and to look beyond national borders. Especially as an entrepreneur, you should make use of a Europe of open borders.
